This 10-night camp-to-camp ride is designed for those who are willing to embrace the outdoors, explore remote wildernesses, and immerse themselves in a fascinatingly different culture. Three factors set our trips to Kyrgyzstan at Alexandra Tolstoy Travel apart from all other operators - first, we ride an authentic journey with a mobile camp (as opposed to a series of daily excursions from a fixed tourist camp) second, the level of service and thirdly, the team of horse guides and support staff.

We begin in Bishkek where we explore the capital city of Kyrgyzstan. From here we make our way southwards towards Osh, arriving at the Sary-Chelek Nature Reserve, a natural paradise known for its outstanding beauty and only accessible to a limited number of visitors per year. It is here we meet the skilled and charismatic local horsemen and their horses, who play a crucial role in the upcoming adventure.

From our first campsite we ride out into the wild, untamed beauty of the Chatkal Range of the Tien Shan Mountains, passing along rugged mountain paths, through ancient walnut forests and across wildflower-strewn valleys dotted with alpine lakes. Riding approximately six hours per day, with a break for a picnic lunch, our journey takes us over remote mountain passes and plateaus that offer a unique glimpse into the lives of nomadic shepherds and their families who spend their summers living in yurts and grazing their animals in these elevated regions.

The entire camp, including beautiful Uzbek crockery, is carefully packed and moved each day in a huge ex-army truck ahead of our arrival on horseback. Each night we retire to a private mobile camp set up by the dedicated back-up team with individual tents and a mess tent. Here we eat delicious home-cooked meals at tables laid with Uzbek pottery and lit by oil lamps. This remarkable journey ends as we bid farewell to our trusty horse companions.

We return to Bishkek, round off our Kyrgyz adventure with souvenir shopping and more cultural exploring, before flying home.

Its famous sights include the enormous Alatau Square and the dramatic statue of Manas, the Kyrgyz epic hero.

After an early breakfast, you are driven south-west from the city in a private vehicle to start your horse riding adventure (the drive is approximately ten hours). Once mounted, set off from the poplar lined adobe village, and head for the extraordinary panoramic views of the mountains. Tonight's camp is beside a river, under the shade of walnut trees, with the opportunity to swim and watch passing shepherds with their sheep, goats, mares and donkeys.

15 May Kara Suu / Sary Chelek

Today's ride passes charming vernacular houses and gardens full of flowers and animals, and then through magnificent wooded mountains and wildflower meadows

16 May Sary Chelek / Lake Iri-Kel

This morning's ride is over mountains covered in wildflowers in spring and offering magnificent views of the valleys below. Lunch is a picnic en-route. After passing over Tas-Bel Pass, descend into the national park of Sary Chelek. Leaving the track, ride through orchards of wild apple and plum trees before skirting one of the park's seven beautiful lakes and, after crossing at a ford, stop for a picnic lunch next to the park ranger's little house.

After lunch, more riding through meadows and orchards with chances to canter before reaching the beautiful campsite on the shore of the turquoise waters of Lake Iri-Kel. Surrounded by mountains and meadows of wildflowers, you can swim in the pristine lake. Two nights spent here.

17 May Sary Chelek

Ride around five of the lakes of Sary Chelek Reserve, surrounded by dramatic alpine scenery. Lunch on the shores of the main lake, at a local chai khana (tea house). In the afternoon, ride back to camp with the opportunity to canter through an expansive valley.

18 May Sary Chelek / Lake Kara-Kamish

Today takes us over the imposing Kotorma Pass (altitude 2,446 m) to Lake Kara-Kamish. The route up is steep and narrow, but ably negotiated by the local Kyrgyz horses. Part of the path is taken on foot to avoid any stones dislodged by the horses' hooves. On reaching the top, take in the magnificent view – often with griffon eagles circling above – before beginning to pick your way downhill, passing between tall boulders and waist-high eremurus.

After lunch and tea in a local yurt, ride over a lunar landscape of rocks to the banks of Lake Kara-Suu, set on a high plateau. Here you can watch a game of ulak (a variation on polo but using the body of a headless dead goat) and in the evening enjoy a campfire and delicious goat kebabs whilst being sung to by a local singer accompanied by a komuz (stringed instrument) player.

19 May Lake Kara-Kamish / Kara Suu

Breakfast in camp and set off riding again, descending from Lake Kara-Kamish past a dramatic waterfall back to the village of Kara Suu. This will be the last evening in camp together.

20 May Kara Suu / Bishkek

Final breakfast immersed in nature. Say goodbye to the horses and local team and make your way back to Bishkek by road transfer. Relax in the minibus and watch as the country whizzes by, stopping for lunch in a local dumpling restaurant en route.

After arriving back at the hotel in Bishkek, dinner is in an atmospheric local restaurant within walking distance.

21 May Bishkek

Malika McCosh grew up in Thailand, Somalia, New York and Ukraine because of her father's job at the UN. After studying Russian and French at Oxford, she joined the Blues and Royals on a Household Cavalry expedition of 25 soldiers as Russian interpreter (and only female and civilian) as they drove and camped from London to Baku, through Poland, Ukraine, Turkey and Georgia, over three months. Shortly after, she met Andrew and started a new chapter of living abroad, this time as a diplomat's wife. Together they lived in Kathmandu, Damascus and Istanbul from where she wrote about travel, business and culture for publications including The Times, Conde Nast Traveller, Monocle and Cornucopia. In Istanbul she started a social enterprise for Syrian refugee women called Knitstanbul which provides income for women through knitting and crochet. Malika continues to write freelance, and has a podcast about landmark exhibitions. She is a bilingual French speaker, speaks good Russian and has improving Turkish. Malika loves Kyrgyzstan for the landscapes and the kaymak (clotted cream), its ideal blend of the Turkic and Soviet, two cultures she knows well and loves, and she is passionate about under-touristed places and how to keep them special while exploring them.

Malika is an old friend of Alexandra's and she was a paying client on Alexandra's expedition in May 2023 and now loves leading expeditions of her own. She is a mother of three boys and divides her time between London, Norfolk and the Scottish Borders..
